Reading together

Choose one invitation at a time.

Read the short story. Pause and let your child respond when ready.

Let your child choose a picture, colors and where to begin.

Noticing prompts are invitations, not tests or a checklist to finish.

Describe what you notice, such as two different lines. Ask about their ideas.

Avoid comparisons and do not insist on staying inside the lines.

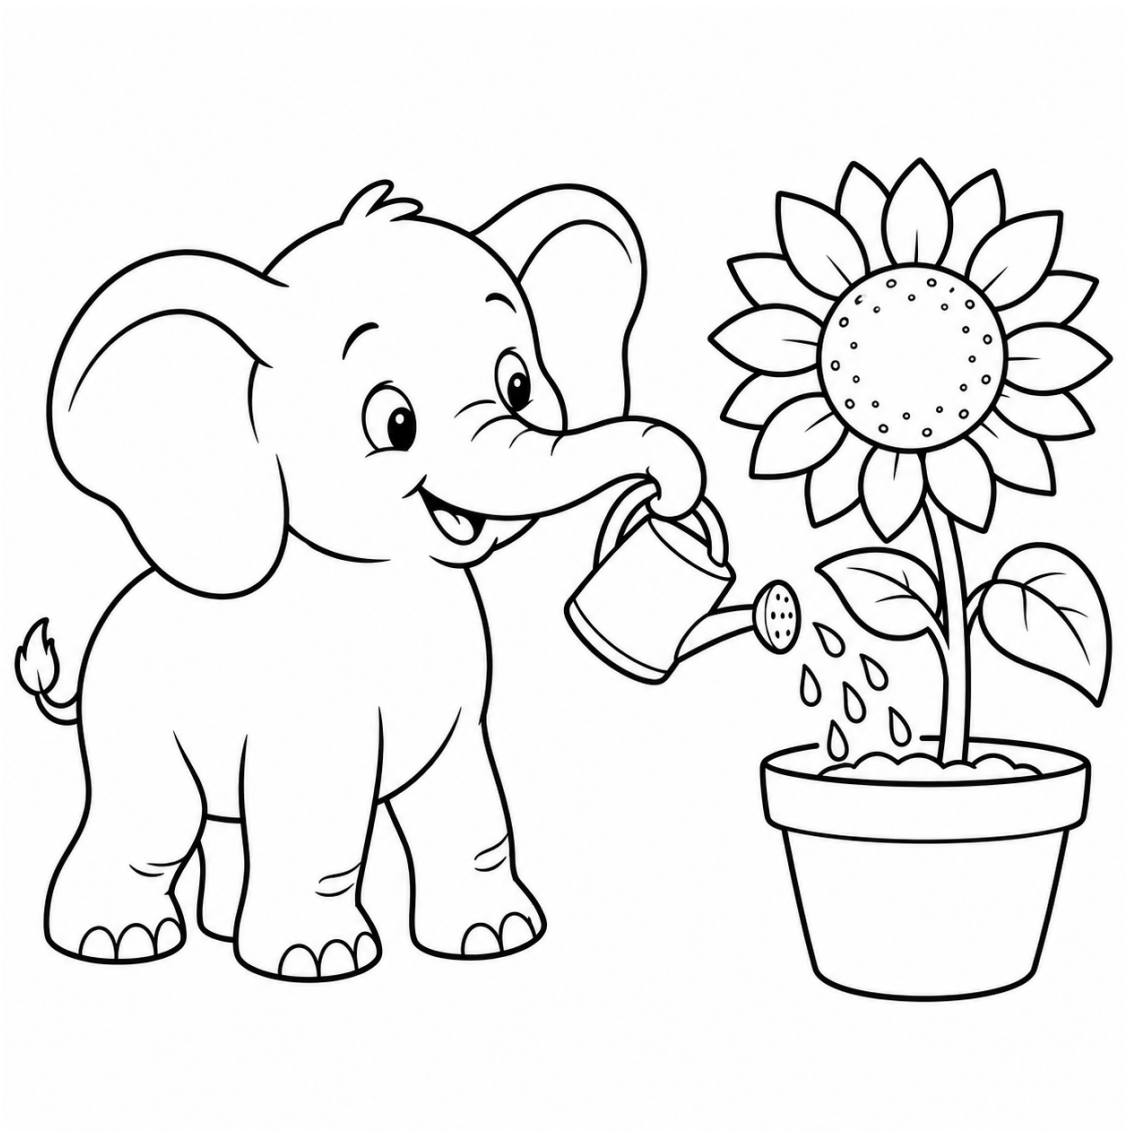

It is fine to pause, skip a prompt or say I do not know yet.

Use the drawing space or more blank paper. A new idea is welcome.

Elephant's dream garden

Read or listen, then choose your own way to begin.

Little Elephant has a watering can. Today he wants to care for his garden. What else could grow in your dream garden?

Notice: Find a drop of water that catches your eye.

Your choice: Choose to color the flower or elephant first.

You can pause and come back.

Continue your story

Elephant's dream garden

Draw something you would add to the garden.

How does your new idea change the story?

Show a part you worked on. Would you like to tell me about it?

You can speak, point, draw, or ask an adult to write your words.

For adults: listen without scoring how pretty it is.
